Educational History

- BS, 1980, Purdue University, Biology
- MA, 1996, University of Michigan, Anthropology
- PhD, 2002, University of Michigan, Anthropology
- Postdoc, 2002-2004, University of Michigan, Human Genetics

Employment History

- Professor, 2021 – present, Anthropology, University of New Mexico
- Chair, 2021 – present, Anthropology, University of New Mexico
- Interim Chair, 2019-21, Anthropology, University of New Mexico
- Associate Professor, 2011-2021, Anthropology, University of New Mexico
- Assistant Professor, 2005-11, Anthropology, University of New Mexico
- Visiting Assistant Professor, 2004-05, Anthropology, University of New Mexico

Professional Recognition and Honors

- Letter of recognition for contribution to course and program assessment, 2017, Associate Dean of Curriculum and Instruction, College of Arts and Sciences, University of New Mexico
- Gabriel W. Lasker Award. 2016, for research article by Hunley and Cabana (2016) in Human Biology
- Invited Commentary, 2015, Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences
- Nominee, 2011, Outstanding Online Teacher of the Year, University of New Mexico
- Keynote speaker, 2015, American Association of Physical Anthropologists, Symposium: Thinking anthropologically about genetics
- Invited Public Lecture, 2015, Morrison Institute, Stanford University
- Nominee, 2007, Outstanding Teacher of the Year Award, University of New Mexico
- Roy A. Rappaport Teaching Award, 2002, Department of Anthropology, University of Michigan
- Genome Sciences Training Fellowship, 1999 – 2001, National Institutes of Health

Short Narrative Description of Research

My research in genetic anthropology spans two million years of our evolutionary history, from the origin of the genus Homo in the Pleistocene to the formation of ethnic groups in New Mexico over the past 400 years. The common thread in my research projects is an interest in the persistence of genetic and linguistic structure within our species despite the fluid nature of population boundaries and the ephemeral nature of individual groups. My publications have provided insights into the initial dispersal of humans from Africa, the non-existence of biological races, the co-evolution of genes and languages, the impact of colonial migration on ethnogenesis, and the psychosocial and cultural determinants of interest and uptake of skin cancer genetic testing.

Short Narrative Description of Teaching

My core undergraduate teaching responsibility is the General Education course Anth 1135 Introduction to Biological Anthropology. It is one of the few science courses taken by non-STEM majors at UNM, and it is often their only exposure to evolution. In my upper-level undergraduate courses, I help students understand and critique primary literature in population and human genetics, and I provide students with skills in data analysis, laboratory methods, research design, and professional writing.

Short Narrative Description of Service

I have served as department chair, associate chair, director of the undergraduate committee, member on various departmental, college and professional committees, external evaluator for promotion, and associate editor of Human Biology.
